Lucy Meneghello is an adventurous and independent individual who loves learning about new cultures and people. Originally from Portland, Oregon, Lucy attends Fordham University in New York City, where she studies Anthropology and Italian. Her love of travel and exploration has led her to always be on the lookout for her next adventure and next language to learn. She looks forward to studying abroad in the coming year and immersing herself in the city of Florence.

Lucy has worked in many different fields, always finding a way to put her leadership skills to use. She was introduced to consulting through her mother's work as an executive leadership consultant, and soon recognized the potential for using her anthropological training to help organizations achieve their goals. Lucy hopes to continue to apply these skills to future endeavors.
